As you can see below, our local DOE customer Brian Vance intends to continue the current Site posture through next week. I appreciate the Vit Plant team's persistence in progressing the job even while the majority of our team are working remotely. We have seen positive progress, and I'm proud of the team's creativity and attitude. While these times are challenging, we will get through them together.

One Team,
Val

All Hanford Site Employees:

SUBJECT: CURRENT HANFORD SITE POSTURE OF ESSENTIAL MISSION CRITICAL OPERATIONS CONTINUES NEXT WEEK

The Hanford Site successfully transitioned into an essential mission-critical operations posture last week and I appreciate everyone's flexibility during these unprecedented times.

While the majority of the Hanford Site workforce is continuing our important work through teleworking, there are a limited number of workers reporting to the site to perform activities necessary to maintain the site in a safe condition, continuing to protect the community, region, and the environment.

As our nation and region navigate the evolving crisis, we will continue to assess many factors that will be considered before a decision can be made to transition the site posture methodically back towards normal operations. At this time, I intend to continue the current Hanford Site posture of essential mission critical operations for the week of 6 April.

While this is a challenging time for everyone, I ask that you each focus on being safe and healthy, whether at work on the site, at home, or in the community.

Please continue to monitor the Hanford Mobile app and the Hanford website for updates.
